Bart Starr, the quarterback of the Green Bay Packers, was named for the fourth straight season as the NFL Player of the Year by Press Enterprise reporters. Starr, who led the Packers to the Super Bowl victory last January, was honored for his performance during the 1966 season. He set a record by throwing for 2,391 yards and 24 touchdowns, both of which were NFL records for a single season. Starr also rushed for 404 yards and 10 touchdowns, and his total of 2,795 yards from scrimmage was another NFL record. Starr's performances were instrumental in helping the Packers win their second consecutive NFC championship and their first Super Bowl title. He was voted the Most Valuable Player of the Super Bowl, and his play was a key factor in the Packers' victory.

Dolphins have grand designs

The Miami Dolphins, with a series of big plays, have taken control of the entire Gulf Coast of the Southern Division. The Dolphins have won seven straight games, including a 41-14 victory over the New England Patriots. They have scored at least 10 points in every game during this streak, and their defense has held their opponents to an average of 14.8 points per game. The Dolphins' biggest victory came against the New England Patriots, where they scored 28 points in the fourth quarter to win 41-14. This was the biggest comeback in NFL history, as the Dolphins scored 24 straight points after trailing 14-0 at halftime.

A game vs. Boston University was scheduled for Saturday, but the game was postponed due to a snowstorm. The Dolphins will now have a week's rest before their next game against the Cleveland Browns.

Vikings have some difficulty

The Minnesota Vikings, who entered the season with high expectations, have struggled in recent weeks. After a strong start, they have dropped four of their last five games, including a 27-0 loss to the Dallas Cowboys last Sunday. The Vikings' defense has not performed up to par, allowing 39 points in the past two games. Their quarterback, Fran Tarkenton, has been inconsistent, throwing for a total of 487 yards and three touchdowns in the last two games.

The Vikings' next game is against the New York Giants on Sunday. They will need a strong performance from their defense to have any chance of winning.

St. Louis to win sixth straight

By Drew Blakeman

This week's predictions are:

Delaware 27, San Francisco 16 - After four straight victories, the Dukes might be getting a little overconfident.

Oakland 33, San Diego 7 - The Raiders are going to start turning up for postseason action, but not that their season's been alarmingly.

Atlanta 7, New Orleans 6 - Last season's playoff games were either set or scored by their defenses.

Baltimore 40, New York Jets 12 - The Jets have proved that they can pull a few upsets, but they won't in this game.

Pittsburgh 27, Dallas 24 - The last time the Cowboys lost was in 2016, so can anyone remember back that far?

Chicago 13, Minnesota 10 - The Vikings may have some difficulty without Fran Tarkenton.

Miami 28, New England 41. Buffalo 0

Titans 26, Cleveland 22, New York Giants 10 - The Titans are starting to stay alive in the AFC Central race with a last-second score.

New England 31, Buffalo 6 - Now that the pressure is off the Patriots, they might be able to roll up the score in revenge.

Miami 28, Cincinnati 20 - The Dolphins have grand designs upon winning their division.

Washington 26, Green Bay 10 - Bart Starr will come off the bench to replace the injured Lynn Dickey, but no one avail.

Last week: 12-2, .857

About 150 spectators came to cheer on their favorite team in Sunday's IM Football Championship. However, for LCA the cheers and signs such as this one were in vain as SAE routed LCA 31-6. (Photo by Gordon Haft)

SAE routed LCA, 31-6, for IM football crown

By Gordon Haft

Last Sunday afternoon, under overcast, wintry skies, MIT's equivalent to the Harvard-Yale game was held on the Rugby Field. It was the IM Football Championships - B-League in this case since there was no A-League this season. As it has for the last eight years, the championship game featured Lambda Chi Alpha against Sigma Alpha Epsilon and, as has happened throughout those years except for once three years ago, SAE emerged victorious.

This game draws enthusiastic fans not only from the groups involved but from numerous other places as well. Spectators line up on the side of that fraternity which they prefer (or dislike less, as the case may be) and cheer as if it were a varsity sport. Actually, with the experience I have had with varsity sports, the fans at intramural games like this one are often a good deal more enthusiastic than those at varsity games.

The game began at two in the afternoon. Already there was the feeling of snow in the air. LCA's "blond" led off the game by playing their rendition of "The Star Spangled Banner." By the time the contest got underway, each sideline was lined by about 75 spectators, most bundled up in down jackets and sweaters.

The game was never really close. The powerful quarterbacking of Bruce Winstead '79 and the four touchdown passes hauled in by Thad Stanley G '79 had already sealed the game by the end of the first quarter. LCA's offense led by John Kirsch '79 was able to score but one touchdown in the second half.

By the fourth quarter, SAE led 24-6 and many of the spectators began to depart as the light dimmed and the temperature dropped below freezing. A few minutes before the end of the contest, SAE added another seven points to make the final score 31-6.

Although many IM Championships draw considerable crowds, certain elements of the football championships are different from the others. Most important, there is no higher level of football competition at MIT. It is THE MIT Football championship rather than a competition without 20 or 30 of the school's better players.

Water polo third

By Gordon Haft

Last weekend, the MIT varsity water polo team finished its season in the New England Championships at Brown where it finished third behind second place Yale and first place Brown, champions for the last two years. This represented the culmination of MIT's best season. Since the team won the New England championship six years ago.

On Friday, MIT played games against UMass and Harvard, finishing them handily 31-1 and 10-3 respectively. The next day the team did not fare as well. In an extremely tight defensive game, Yale defeated MIT 5-3. What loss the game for MIT was its inability to capitalize on one-on-one situations, usually one of the team's strong points. After coming from behind to tie the game 3-3 Yale was hit with several quick ejections, but the MIT squad was unable to capitalize. Shortly thereafter, Yale sprung to a 5-3 lead which MIT could not equal.

Coach John Benedick called the Brown game "an excellently fought game." He said that "the guys played really hard."

However, the team lost 12-4 as it was unable to hold down the explosive Brown offense.

The season has ended with an 11-9 record - 10-6 in league play. In addition, junior Peter Griffiths of MIT's goalie has been nominated to first team All New England. Sophomore John Dolan and junior Ken Culvert were both nominated to second team All New England, while Seniors Dick Hontz and Sam Sene each received Honorable Mention. In short, in the words of Coach Benedick, "it has been a very successful season."
