Grading Committee's new report released

By Laurence Duffy

The Ad Hoc Committee on Grading recommended three changes to the present grading system in its report, which was published in full in this week's issue of The Tech. The report will be presented at the First Annual Meeting of the MIT Ad Hoc Committee on Graduates, to be held on March 15 faculty meeting.

The new definitions proposed are:

A: An all-one grade for the skills, concepts, and modes of understanding embodied in the subject. This is an honor grade. Masters of skills, concepts, and modes of understanding covered in the subject. C. Sufficient competence to continue to Davenport explained, in order to allow an incoming department head to work at least on the whole MIT and the passing grade. P. The meanings of A, B, C, and D, which now stand separately for "passed with honor," "passed," "passed," and "borderline pass," would be made longer and more explicit.
