Tribute, a new play starring Jack Lemmon, is the story of a tribute to Scottie Templeton's life. This tribute occurs in the form of a series of flashbacks about his life. Beneath the facade of a man with a gift for laughter and a zest for living, lies a man afraid to get to know his son.

Scottie, the friendly, funny Templeton's life. This tribute occurs in the form of a series of flashbacks about his life. Beneath the facade of a man with a gift for laughter and a zest for living, lies a man afraid to get to know his son. Lemmon's portrayal of the multi-faceted Lemmon's portrayal of the multi-faceted... tempers his view of life - "If a friend dies, you lose a friend. If you die, you lose all your friends." Yet his cancer necessitates the intermediate yet difficult bridging of the widening gap between him and his son.

Such a situation had a potential to verge on being a maudlin soap opera, yet the play's nature seems to have taken the lead and shown off Lemmon's talent as a comic, a serious actor, and a pianist.

The only thing Scottie does well is to live and have fun. using the whole world as a straight man. "Who wants to go through life playing an empty stage?" he jokes, in tones the most serious of situations into a stand-up comedy routine.
