Cardiac victim saved

Late Saturday evening, a graduate student on Briggs Field suddenly collapsed to the ground unconscious while participating in a game of tag football. Other players noted the sudden collapse of a missing Campus Police cruiser and called to the officer for help. Radiology for the hospital were repeatedly punched and kicked, including being punched by one of the men who wore a white glove.

When the gun fled, the officer was able to call for help via radio, and then exited the building in pursuit of his attackers. While three of the six made good their escape, the three primarily responsible for the beating were captured by MIT Campus Police officers responding to the call for assistance.

Two of the three arrested suspects have long police records involving crimes of violence. All were charged with assault and battery upon a police officer and certain other crimes.

Two of the three defendants have already been tried and found guilty by the Third District Court. They are appealing their convictions to the Superior Court. The matter of the third defendant has been bound over for the consideration of the Grand Jury.
