Civilian government in Iran — The Shah of Iran met the country's new civilian government in Tehran on Saturday, January 7. This government will be headed by prime minister designate Shapour Bakhtiar. Meanwhile, it is reported that the Shah has finally indicated he will leave the country for a while. He was quoted as saying I am very tired and in need of medical attention I cannot get in this country. It is not known yet where he will go. Observers believe he will come to the US where part of his family is already residing.

Cambodian capital taken by rebels — Radio Hanoi reported that the Vietnamese-backed Cambodian National United Front marched into Phnom Penh over the weekend, overthrowing the Pol Pot regime and gaining control over most of Cambodia. The whereabouts of the Cambodian prime minister, Pol Pot, are not known.

Israel to admit 100 Indochinese refugees — The Israeli government has announced its decision to take 100 Indochinese refugees to new homes in Israel. Opponents of the decision are split into two groups. One group argues that the number offered is too small and would hardly help in the Indochinese refugee problem, while the other claims that this gesture would tax Israel's capacity to handle its own problems.

Ford in Boston — Former president Gerald Ford criticized the Carter Administration for "uncertain and inconsistent" policy toward the Shah of Iran. His criticism was delivered in a Boston news conference. However, he praised Carter for the normalization of relations with China, saying it would have been on his own agenda if he had been elected in 1976.

Not many will retire at 70 — According to US Labor Department employment experts, most Americans will still retire before the new mandatory retirement age of 70. Over the past year, the trend has continued for people to retire earlier — not later. Improved private pension plans and increased social-security benefits have started workers to leave jobs early. It is also thought that a ready availability of full-time or part-time jobs has encouraged this trend.

Party

Out there in the Atlantic Ocean on a sunshine beach there's going to be an outbreak of revelry this vacation break. And after the sun goes down, well, you know the effect that moonlight has on a celebration. We can only hope it won't be a full moon.

Because from Jan. 13 through April 21 we're opening Nassau and Paradise Island to a wave of American college students. We have reason to believe that wave may reach tidal proportions. Probably because of the price: $269 including airfare and 7 nights hotel.

So there it is, young America. We guarantee you the best of dancing on the beach, water sports and a roaring party. Beyond that, you're invited to improvise. And since your talent for good timing is legendary, we've made preparations for you. We're going to be ready.

With open arms.

Digital

Digital is unlike most companies its size (over a billion in computer sales). We're structured to encourage the unlettered and unconventional. That's the way we like our people. And that's the nature of opportunity here.

Our professionals make their own beds. And they contribute from the day they start. We expect it. They expect it. No one's disappointed.
