I am a 21-year-old woman and although I am not a Brown student I would like to commend you for running the Playshop ad for models in spite of the opposition by several "women's" groups. I feel that a woman has the right to choose her own lifestyle and decide what is best for her.

That is true liberation.

It infuriates me when certain "women's" groups start telling other women like children who don't know what is good for them — in the same sense as telling advertisers that they should not advertise sugared cereals because children do not have the mental capacity to determine for themselves what may be harmful to them.

There is nothing more annoying than people who are trying to "liberate" you so they can oppress you themselves by forcing their ideas on you.

The "women's" groups who were trying to ban the ad fall into this category. I speak for many other women when I say that, as the old saying goes, with friends like that, who needs any enemies?
