Gods and Wizards revive Tech Show

After a multitude of false starts, the Tech Show has finally returned to MIT, starting off its comeback with two one-act plays. If the success of this production is any indication, the Tech Show is guaranteed a prolonged life.

The first one-act,Loved and Lost, or That Old Hack Magic, was written by Michael Kirkish G. It deals with a wizard (Marc Chelemer '91) and his three daughters: Elasia (Liz Moberg '80), Demorah (Stephanie Hetz '82) and Sulama (Elizabeth Hart, Wellesley). We learn that Elasia and Demorah are rather promiscuous, while Sulama will have no other man but her long lost lover, Dirkon. We learn that (Stephanie Hetz '82), and Sulama Chelemer '81) and his three daughters:

Though he is now clad in a dream. He then confuses Dave falls in love with her, believing that he is her lover, Dirkon. A very confused Dave falls in love with her, believing the whole affair to be a dream. He then mountains, returns, tries to seduce him to the wizard will lose the bet. Many misadventures follow: Sulama, thinking that she has lost her lover, married Henry VIII, and is then sentenced to be beheaded; Elasia, in order to escape the forest where Sulama lives. She immediately falls in love with Dave, convinced that he is her lover, Dirkon. A very confused Dave falls in love with her, believing the whole affair to be a dream. He then mountains, returns, tries to seduce him to the wizard will lose the bet.

The wizard then transports Dave Dudley (Jerry Stringham '81), an engineer who Completes his education with a B.S. degree in engineering, and then enters the working world. He first starts as a drafter for a local engineering firm, then moves on to become a project manager for a construction company. He eventually becomes the owner of his own firm, specializing in civil engineering projects. Dave is married to a woman named Susan, and they have two children: a son named Michael and a daughter named Jennifer. The family lives in a comfortable suburban home in the city of Boston, Massachusetts.

Despite his success and wealth, Dave never forgets his humble beginnings. He remains involved in his community, serving on various committees and organizations. He also remains active in his industry, participating in various professional groups and associations. Dave is a respected leader in his field, known for his expertise and his ability to get things done.

Unfortunately, Dave's life is cut short when he is diagnosed with a rare form of cancer. Despite his best efforts to fight the disease, he succumbs to it after a long and arduous battle. Dave's family is devastated by his death, but they take comfort in knowing that he lived a fulfilling and meaningful life. They continue to honor his memory by supporting various causes and organizations that he was involved in during his lifetime.

The God Option, written by Michael Tanis '81, is a one-act musical that had its origins in the Tech Show Writing Committee, its no-story plot deals with Minnie Forrest (Linda Schaff '82) and her husband Henry (Matthew Dahl '81), owners of a run-down apartment building. In order to save her home from the clutches of taxman Simon Ledger (Gary Arnold G), who loves Mike, competes with Squeak, has an exposed as a fraud. (The play's close.)

Lindal Schaff as Minnie Forrest proves to be a talented actress. Her portrayal of the shrewish, conniving housewife was flawless, as was her singing during "Money is Divine." Her performance was most convincing, assisted by a strongly developed character. The outlook for the performance was turned in by Jerome Taylor as Squeak Post. His scene from The God Option, a scene from a scene in The God Option, was a strong development of a strong character.

Linda Schaff as Minnie Forrest proves to be a talented actress. Her portrayal of the shrewish, conniving housewife was flawless, as was her singing during "Money is Divine." Her performance was most convincing, assisted by a strongly developed character. The outlook for the performance was turned in by Jerome Taylor as Squeak Post. His scene from The God Option, a scene from a scene in The God Option, was a strong development of a strong character.

Although Rounder receives many tapes from performers, it rarely signs groups that use this approach. "Most of the artists we sign are respected by their fellow musicians or Rounder's taste," said Leighton. "But if a group has something special, we will take a chance."

Rounder's biggest success story would have to be George Thorogood and the Destroyers. Since Rounder has no artists that could be classified as rock 'n' rollers, Thorogood is a sensation in more ways than his success. Leighton said that deciding to sign Thorogood raised some questions for the label. "Basically we thought that George as a rock 'n' roll should be on a major label because he's a rock 'n' roll," remarked Leighton, "but after talking with George we realized that he didn't want to part of a large label. He is a musician and a producer. He wants to display his vocal abilities and great success.

The Tech Show gave some new writers and actors a chance to display their talents, with great success. With more time and maturity, these talented people should be able to make the next production an overwhelming success.

Linda Schaff as Minnie Forrest proves to be a talented actress. Her portrayal of the shrewish, conniving housewife was flawless, as was her singing during "Money is Divine." Her performance was most convincing, assisted by a strongly developed character.

The outlook for the performance was turned in by Jerome Taylor as Squeak Post. His scene from the "church" where he preaches to the crowd was the show's peak. "The Profit of Lam," a pastiche of pop tunes and Mostly Pythons, allowed Taylor to display his vocal abilities with great success.

The Tech Show gave some new writers and actors a chance to display their talents, with great success. With more time and maturity, these talented people should be able to make the next production an overwhelming success.

Linda Schaff as Minnie Forrest proves to be a talented actress. Her portrayal of the shrewish, conniving housewife was flawless, as was her singing during "Money is Divine." Her performance was most convincing, assisted by a strongly developed character.

The outlook for the performance was turned in by Jerome Taylor as Squeak Post. His scene from the "church" where he preaches to the crowd was the show's peak. "The Profit of Lam," a pastiche of pop tunes and Mostly Pythons, allowed Taylor to display his vocal abilities with great success.

The Tech Show gave some new writers and actors a chance to display their talents, with great success. With more time and maturity, these talented people should be able to make the next production an overwhelming success.