Is MIT a responsible shareholder?

(Continued from page 4) It is evident that MIT has no wish to be considered a responsible shareholder. This is contrary to the spirit of the shareholder responsibility movement that has been growing in recent years. MIT must address this issue seriously and take appropriate action to ensure that its investments are consistent with its stated values.

There is a danger that MIT may become involved in activities that are inconsistent with its values. This could happen if MIT invests in companies that engage in unethical practices or if it fails to take a position on important social issues.

Humanism or radicalism for humanities?

(Continued from page 4) It is important to recognize that humanism is not radicalism, and that radicalism is not humanism. Humanism is a philosophical perspective that emphasizes the importance of the individual and the appreciation of human potential. Radicalism, on the other hand, is a political perspective that seeks to bring about fundamental change in society.

It is important to preserve the integrity of the humanities as a separate academic discipline. The humanities are not a set of unrelated subjects, but rather a connected body of knowledge that is essential for the development of a well-rounded individual and for the advancement of society.

See Ideas Happen

We offer a forum for ideas like no other.

Your ideas don't have to filter through several administrative levels. They're critiqued by superbly competent people like yourself, on the spot. If they survive the fire of that crucible, they happen — right away.

Our ideas happen because responsible people make them happen. At SPA, responsibility and hard work are the cornerstone of our success. We provide direct, immediate rewards for this support, through our generous salary and bonus system.

Concepts move the world. At this company, computers help move the concepts. Help us use computers in the way they were meant to be used.

March 19-20 at the MIT Placement Office

Strategic Planning Associates

A small firm in the growing field of corporate strategic planning, providing consulting services to Fortune 500 companies.

Technical Research Division 175 Federal Street Boston, Massachusetts 02110