The Magic Pan, Proud Popover reviewed

The Proud Popover is a quaint restaurant in the Quincy Market place featuring early American decor and cuisine. As the name indicates, the house specialty is popovers. Dishes from seafood to beef curry are served on fresh hot popovers. With every meal, a basket of steaming popovers is served with honey and fresh butter.

The atmosphere is rustic. You are greeted at the door by a hostess costumed as if this were an inn in the early eighteen hundreds. You are escorted to an oak table set with wooden chairs. Surrounding you are planked walls and high beamed ceilings. The dining rooms come complete with a loft.

Service is prompt and usually courteous. Sometimes, however, it may take a while to receive your order from the kitchen.

Dinners on the weekends are in the $7-$10 price range. On Sundays the restaurant is open for brunch, with numerous specials. Midweek prices are subject to a small change.

Grading on a scale of 1-5, the Proud Popover rates as follows:

Food: 3
Although amply portioned, the food is often bland and sometimes it is not served warm enough.

Service: 4
The waiters and waitresses were pleasant and usually efficient, but they are not truly outstanding.

Atmosphere: 4
The decor is truly novel. Its furnishings and table set with wooden chairs. Surrounding you are planked walls and high beamed ceilings. The dining rooms come complete with a loft.
