UA approves Smith event

By Rick Larkin and Jay Glass

Student leaders, proto and other controversial figures gathered Wednesday evening at MIT's Union to discuss the impoundment of Smith. The committee has not yet decided whether to approve the Smith event.

The Social Committee of MIT's student government has been criticized for its decision to approve the Smith event. Some students have even called for the Social Committee to be dissolved.

The Social Committee has been accused of overlooking important issues, such as the potential harm that Smith might cause to the MIT community. Many students believe that the committee is too focused on pleasing a small group of students and is not taking the needs of the entire MIT community into account.

The Social Committee has issued a statement in response to the criticism, stating that they will continue to evaluate the potential consequences of the Smith event and make decisions in the best interest of the MIT community.