March 4 claims success

By Jerri-Lynn Scofield

An estimated six hundred MIT students and faculty members participated in some of the activities of the March 4 "teach-in," held this past Tuesday in the Student Center.

According to Professor Jonathan King, who led a workshop on "The MX Missile Development," "I was very pleased with the turnout of students...which was very large, considering the amount of time and publicity that was spent organizing the event.

Topics discussed in the large lecture sections included: the history of March 4 at MIT, the global situation, domestic issues, and local MIT perspectives. The session on global affairs was particularly well attended. Approximately four hundred people crowded into the Lals de Puerto Rico to attend this session, including many who had to stand to listen to the speakers.

Reverend Scott Paradise, MIT's Episcopal chaplain who led a workshop on "Racism and Sexism at MIT," when asked to comment on the day's activities, John replied, "I thought that it was really inspiring...There were a lot of really good people thinking...It was just great to get together with people who share the same concerns." John indicated that most of the groups that worked on preparing workshops for March 4 would be continuing their activities. The MIT Educational group, the Racism and Sexism group, the MX Missile/Disarmament group, the Draft group, the Appropriate Technology group, and the Freedoms in America group are planning to continue meeting and discussing issues.

During January of 1969, a group of MIT faculty members proposed that all research activities be suspended at the Institute on March 4, 1980, and that the day be devoted to reflection on the proper role of science and technology in society. Tuesday's activities were planned with the idea of the original March 4 in mind.
