Reactions to talk mixed

President Gray commented that Mondale's speech addressed issues that are important at an institution such as MIT, while former MIT presidents Jerome Wiesner and Howard Johnson, who introduced the Vice President at the beginning of the speech, sensed a feeling of student interest in the Vice President. Wiesner noted that Mondale enjoyed speaking with students after the speech, while Johnson observed that the Vice President "would have liked to talk for another hour." Veteran political observers from the national media did not seem to be overly enthusiastic about the speech, however, with the cameras seldom rolling and correspondents paying little attention.
