Steven Solnick

Pressing on

By all indications, it appears that the next president of the National Academy of Sciences will be none other than MIT's own Frank Press. Press, formerly head of the Earth and Planetary Department, is currently the Chancellor's Science Advisor. It has been widely reported that Press will be nominated at the meeting of the Academy's governing council on Sunday. If he is the only name placed into nomination, as is likely, her election by the over 1300 Academy members will be assured.

Press, the former head of the Earth and Planetary Department, is currently MIT's own Frank Press. It has been widely reported that Press will be nominated at the meeting of the Academy's governing council on Sunday. If he is the only name placed into nomination, as is likely, her election by the over 1300 Academy members will be assured.

Press, the former head of the Earth and Planetary Department, is currently MIT's own Frank Press. It has been widely reported that Press will be nominated at the meeting of the Academy's governing council on Sunday. If he is the only name placed into nomination, as is likely, her election by the over 1300 Academy members will be assured.