Gays reply: homosexuality not a habit

To the Editor:

I am a male undergraduate quite familiar with the choice that gay people have made. There is no choice, however, when it comes to being gay. I think I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, but your own ignorant, uninformed prejudice that gay people have escaped and will continue to do so. I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, and it was an acknowledgement of my own nature, rather than a decision made by me. But the sexual preference is also constant. Gays and lesbians often move—flee—to certain large cities, such as Boston, that have a large gay community by now. They may achieve a certain personal recognition and acceptance among other gay people. They may feel that they have escaped society around them. They must acknowledge their identity and to accept them as an integral part of their own lives. They may feel that they have escaped society around them. They must acknowledge their identity and accept them as an integral part of their own lives.

To the Editor:

There is a problem, however, when it comes to being gay. I think I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, and it was an acknowledgement of my own nature, rather than a decision made by me. But the sexual preference is also constant. Gays and lesbians often move—flee—to certain large cities, such as Boston, that have a large gay community by now. They may achieve a certain personal recognition and acceptance among other gay people. They may feel that they have escaped society around them. They must acknowledge their identity and accept them as an integral part of their own lives.

To the Editor:

I am a male undergraduate quite familiar with the choice that gay people have made. There is no choice, however, when it comes to being gay. I think I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, but your own ignorant, uninformed prejudice that gay people have escaped and will continue to do so. I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, and it was an acknowledgement of my own nature, rather than a decision made by me. But the sexual preference is also constant. Gays and lesbians often move—flee—to certain large cities, such as Boston, that have a large gay community by now. They may achieve a certain personal recognition and acceptance among other gay people. They may feel that they have escaped society around them. They must acknowledge their identity and accept them as an integral part of their own lives.

To the Editor:

I am a male undergraduate quite familiar with the choice that gay people have made. There is no choice, however, when it comes to being gay. I think I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, but your own ignorant, uninformed prejudice that gay people have escaped and will continue to do so. I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, and it was an acknowledgement of my own nature, rather than a decision made by me. But the sexual preference is also constant. Gays and lesbians often move—flee—to certain large cities, such as Boston, that have a large gay community by now. They may achieve a certain personal recognition and acceptance among other gay people. They may feel that they have escaped society around them. They must acknowledge their identity and accept them as an integral part of their own lives.

To the Editor:

I am a male undergraduate quite familiar with the choice that gay people have made. There is no choice, however, when it comes to being gay. I think I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, but your own ignorant, uninformed prejudice that gay people have escaped and will continue to do so. I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, and it was an acknowledgement of my own nature, rather than a decision made by me. But the sexual preference is also constant. Gays and lesbians often move—flee—to certain large cities, such as Boston, that have a large gay community by now. They may achieve a certain personal recognition and acceptance among other gay people. They may feel that they have escaped society around them. They must acknowledge their identity and accept them as an integral part of their own lives.

To the Editor:

I am a male undergraduate quite familiar with the choice that gay people have made. There is no choice, however, when it comes to being gay. I think I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, but your own ignorant, uninformed prejudice that gay people have escaped and will continue to do so. I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, and it was an acknowledgement of my own nature, rather than a decision made by me. But the sexual preference is also constant. Gays and lesbians often move—flee—to certain large cities, such as Boston, that have a large gay community by now. They may achieve a certain personal recognition and acceptance among other gay people. They may feel that they have escaped society around them. They must acknowledge their identity and accept them as an integral part of their own lives.

To the Editor:

I am a male undergraduate quite familiar with the choice that gay people have made. There is no choice, however, when it comes to being gay. I think I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, but your own ignorant, uninformed prejudice that gay people have escaped and will continue to do so. I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, and it was an acknowledgement of my own nature, rather than a decision made by me. But the sexual preference is also constant. Gays and lesbians often move—flee—to certain large cities, such as Boston, that have a large gay community by now. They may achieve a certain personal recognition and acceptance among other gay people. They may feel that they have escaped society around them. They must acknowledge their identity and accept them as an integral part of their own lives.

To the Editor:

I am a male undergraduate quite familiar with the choice that gay people have made. There is no choice, however, when it comes to being gay. I think I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, but your own ignorant, uninformed prejudice that gay people have escaped and will continue to do so. I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, and it was an acknowledgement of my own nature, rather than a decision made by me. But the sexual preference is also constant. Gays and lesbians often move—flee—to certain large cities, such as Boston, that have a large gay community by now. They may achieve a certain personal recognition and acceptance among other gay people. They may feel that they have escaped society around them. They must acknowledge their identity and accept them as an integral part of their own lives.

To the Editor:

I am a male undergraduate quite familiar with the choice that gay people have made. There is no choice, however, when it comes to being gay. I think I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, but your own ignorant, uninformed prejudice that gay people have escaped and will continue to do so. I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, and it was an acknowledgement of my own nature, rather than a decision made by me. But the sexual preference is also constant. Gays and lesbians often move—flee—to certain large cities, such as Boston, that have a large gay community by now. They may achieve a certain personal recognition and acceptance among other gay people. They may feel that they have escaped society around them. They must acknowledge their identity and accept them as an integral part of their own lives.

To the Editor:

I am a male undergraduate quite familiar with the choice that gay people have made. There is no choice, however, when it comes to being gay. I think I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, but your own ignorant, uninformed prejudice that gay people have escaped and will continue to do so. I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, and it was an acknowledgement of my own nature, rather than a decision made by me. But the sexual preference is also constant. Gays and lesbians often move—flee—to certain large cities, such as Boston, that have a large gay community by now. They may achieve a certain personal recognition and acceptance among other gay people. They may feel that they have escaped society around them. They must acknowledge their identity and accept them as an integral part of their own lives.

To the Editor:

I am a male undergraduate quite familiar with the choice that gay people have made. There is no choice, however, when it comes to being gay. I think I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, but your own ignorant, uninformed prejudice that gay people have escaped and will continue to do so. I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, and it was an acknowledgement of my own nature, rather than a decision made by me. But the sexual preference is also constant. Gays and lesbians often move—flee—to certain large cities, such as Boston, that have a large gay community by now. They may achieve a certain personal recognition and acceptance among other gay people. They may feel that they have escaped society around them. They must acknowledge their identity and accept them as an integral part of their own lives.

To the Editor:

I am a male undergraduate quite familiar with the choice that gay people have made. There is no choice, however, when it comes to being gay. I think I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, but your own ignorant, uninformed prejudice that gay people have escaped and will continue to do so. I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, and it was an acknowledgement of my own nature, rather than a decision made by me. But the sexual preference is also constant. Gays and lesbians often move—flee—to certain large cities, such as Boston, that have a large gay community by now. They may achieve a certain personal recognition and acceptance among other gay people. They may feel that they have escaped society around them. They must acknowledge their identity and accept them as an integral part of their own lives.

To the Editor:

I am a male undergraduate quite familiar with the choice that gay people have made. There is no choice, however, when it comes to being gay. I think I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, but your own ignorant, uninformed prejudice that gay people have escaped and will continue to do so. I have come to realize that being gay was more than a choice, and it was an acknowledgement of my own nature, rather than a decision made by me. But the sexual preference is also constant. Gays and lesbians often move—flee—to certain large cities, such as Boston, that have a large gay community by now. They may achieve a certain personal recognition and acceptance among other gay people. They may feel that they have escaped society around them. They must acknowledge their identity and accept them as an integral part of their own lives.