When David Sullivan Entered MIT, He Learned How Hard It Is To Find An Apartment in Cambridge... Now That He's On the City Council, He's Doing Something About It.

When David Sullivan moved from East Campus to a Central Square apartment in 1974, reasonably priced places to live were already hard to find in Cambridge. Since then, the shortage of affordable housing has reached crisis proportions. If left unchecked, rising rents and condominium conversions would make it impossible for most people to live in Cambridge.

Two years ago, David Sullivan was elected as the only tenant to the City Council. He has led the fight to strengthen rent control and wrote the city law that protects tenants from condemnation evictions and preserves affordable rental housing.

But these laws protecting tenants passed by a slim one vote margin; five to four. A well-financed group of real estate speculators is trying to overturn rent control in the November 3 elections.

Your vote is needed to keep Cambridge a community where all of us can live.

On Nov. 3, vote #1 to re-elect David Sullivan Cambridge City Council Vote the CCA and Tenant Slates
