The safety on the streets exhibit will feature a new alarm device ized panic button, said Glavin. If a person is accosted by stranger in the streets, he can activate the panic button, causing it to ring, explained Glavin. A panic button is different from a shrill alarm because it can be installed on a door so that it rings when an intruder enters, according to Glavin.

The bicycle theft prevention exhibit will feature displays of Citadell and Kryptonite bike locks; the auto theft prevention exhibits will have arrays of tools which bicycle and auto thieves use.

There will be an audio-visual display with cassette movie recordings on films about rape, mugging, and robbery, declined Glavin. Last year's Crime Prevention Fair showed these films on MIT Cable Television; however, the Campus Police Department has since bought a cassette movie recorder for about $2,000, commented Glavin.

Other exhibits include home security, office and laboratory security, and consumer information.

The cost of the Crime Prevention Fair is "definitely in the thousands," reported Glavin. She explained that the biggest cost is the extremely expensive handsome and literature. She explained, "Some pamphlets cost thirty cents a piece, and when you order thousands, it adds up."

Our recruiters will also be interviewing on November 12 for individuals in engineering, business, computer science, physics, mathematics, and other majors.
