Bush: ‘No’ to nuclear war

By Jerri-Lynn Scofield

As more than 2,000 demonstrators protested Reagan Administration policies outside, Vice President George H.W. Bush used the occasion of his address to the MIT Sustain Fellows last Friday evening to announce that he would run for president.

Bush spoke in response to the question of whether the United States could have a leader who is concerned about the arms race.

Bush said, “I believe we should increase our spending on nuclear weapons, but we should do so in a way that is consistent with our other priorities.”

Bush also addressed the issue of trade and the deficit, saying that he would work with Congress to balance the budget.

The question on the ballot asked, “Shall the city of Cambridge approve the funding of federal programs for nuclear weapons and programs of foreign intervention?”

The question proposes that the Federal funds go to “local jobs and programs — in quality education, public transportation, energy-efficient housing, improved health care, and other essential services.”

MIT Professor of Biology Jonathan A. King is co-chairman of the campaign to have the question on the ballot affirmed. He is an organizer of the nation-wide movement to decrease defense spending.

The question was placed on the ballot by authorized to tax real estate and personal property for the purpose of paying the current year’s debt, the current year’s debt, the current year’s debt, and the current year’s debt.

The question was placed on the ballot by authorized to tax real estate and personal property for the purpose of paying the current year’s debt, the current year’s debt, the current year’s debt, and the current year’s debt.

Bush continued, “Such were the developments of Soviet policy during the era of detente and its aftermath. Such is what happened during a period in which the United States made every effort to lessen the tension between the superpowers. We were not repaid in kind. The Soviets had every chance to reciprocate. They chose not to.”

He answered criticism which has been leveled at the US government, stating that modernization is not NATO’s interest. War-fighting is not in NATO’s interest. War-fighting is not in NATO’s interest.

Bush went on to say, “We are not the only ones who are concerned about the arms race. The United Nations and the United Nations and the United Nations...”

Bush continued, “I hope that my presence here hasn’t complicated your lives in any way.”

referring to the demonstration.

Bush used his speech to describe Administration attitudes toward the Soviet Union and the modernization of US nuclear forces in Europe.

In the last decade, Bush declared, “The Soviets and their allies have contributed to nuclear weapons to the world scene — people fleeing from oppression. It is no wonder that we never see people fleeing to Cuba or Vietnam or Russia. And it was no surprise that the Soviets chose not to go to Cancun and discuss disarmament and inhumanism, much as they’re responsible for so much of it.”

The Vice President continued, “Such were the developments of Soviet policy during the era of detente and its aftermath. Such is what happened during a period in which the United States made every effort to lessen the tension between the superpowers. We were not repaid in kind. The Soviets had every chance to reciprocate. They chose not to.”

He answered criticism which has been leveled at the US government, stating that modernization is not NATO’s interest. War-fighting is not in NATO’s interest. War-fighting is not in NATO’s interest.

Bush concluded, “I believe we should increase our spending on nuclear weapons, but we should do so in a way that is consistent with our other priorities.”

Bush also addressed the issue of trade and the deficit, saying that he would work with Congress to balance the budget.

The question on the ballot asked, “Shall the city of Cambridge approve the funding of federal programs for nuclear weapons and programs of foreign intervention?”

The question proposes that the Federal funds go to “local jobs and programs — in quality education, public transportation, energy-efficient housing, improved health care, and other essential services.”

MIT Professor of Biology Jonathan A. King is co-chairman of the campaign to have the question on the ballot affirmed. He is an organizer of the nation-wide movement to decrease defense spending.

The question was placed on the ballot by authorized to tax real estate and personal property for the purpose of paying the current year’s debt, the current year’s debt, the current year’s debt, and the current year’s debt.

Bush continued, “Such were the developments of Soviet policy during the era of detente and its aftermath. Such is what happened during a period in which the United States made every effort to lessen the tension between the superpowers. We were not repaid in kind. The Soviets had every chance to reciprocate. They chose not to.”

He answered criticism which has been leveled at the US government, stating that modernization is not NATO’s interest. War-fighting is not in NATO’s interest. War-fighting is not in NATO’s interest.

Bush went on to say, “We are not the only ones who are concerned about the arms race. The United Nations and the United Nations and the United Nations...”

Bush continued, “I hope that my presence here hasn’t complicated your lives in any way.”

referring to the demonstration.

Bush used his speech to describe Administration attitudes toward the Soviet Union and the modernization of US nuclear forces in Europe.

In the last decade, Bush declared, “The Soviets and their allies have contributed to nuclear weapons to the world scene — people fleeing from oppression. It is no wonder that we never see people fleeing to Cuba or Vietnam or Russia. And it was no surprise that the Soviets chose not to go to Cancun and discuss disarmament and inhumanism, much as they’re responsible for so much of it.”

The Vice President continued, “Such were the developments of Soviet policy during the era of detente and its aftermath. Such is what happened during a period in which the United States made every effort to lessen the tension between the superpowers. We were not repaid in kind. The Soviets had every chance to reciprocate. They chose not to.”

He answered criticism which has been leveled at the US government, stating that modernization is not NATO’s interest. War-fighting is not in NATO’s interest. War-fighting is not in NATO’s interest.

Bush concluded, “I believe we should increase our spending on nuclear weapons, but we should do so in a way that is consistent with our other priorities.”

Bush also addressed the issue of trade and the deficit, saying that he would work with Congress to balance the budget.

The question on the ballot asked, “Shall the city of Cambridge approve the funding of federal programs for nuclear weapons and programs of foreign intervention?”

The question proposes that the Federal funds go to “local jobs and programs — in quality education, public transportation, energy-efficient housing, improved health care, and other essential services.”

MIT Professor of Biology Jonathan A. King is co-chairman of the campaign to have the question on the ballot affirmed. He is an organizer of the nation-wide movement to decrease defense spending.

The question was placed on the ballot by authorized to tax real estate and personal property for the purpose of paying the current year’s debt, the current year’s debt, the current year’s debt, and the current year’s debt.