was pretty bogus," said Steve. "Vellucci, as Mayor of Cambridge three weeks ago, he was speaking out against the curtailment of programs for depriving children of a proper education."

Although Massachusetts approved Proposition 2 1/2 by over a 2-to-1 margin, Cambridge voted against the bill by nearly the same ratio. The City Council, therefore, was considering placing a referendum on the next ballot to override the effects of Proposition 2 1/2 in Cambridge.

Vellucci earlier broke a deadlock between city liberals and independents by voting against the hiring of attorneys to defend a part of Cambridge's anti-condominium ordinance. The ordinance blocks the conversion of apartments to condominiums. This shift in voting is not indicative of a change in attitude, however, because the mayor is arranging an overhaul of the rent control administration, in an effort to make it operate more efficiently.

Every two years, the nine-member Cambridge City Council elects a mayor from its ranks. The mayor has few special privileges, but will often act as a spokesman for the Council.
