Social council seeks local bands

"Well, we heard that the B-52's had been planning a tour of various small colleges, including MIT," explained H.F. ("Skip") Butler '82, chairman of the Social Council, which cooperates with Fitzhard in allocating funds to such events as the Spring Weekend Concert. "But it looks like Don Law didn't want this to go on, so he bought the B-52's for that time period. He has a major interest in the Orpheum... this happens a lot around Boston."

"Once Don Law steps in, that's it," added Margaret Gibson, staff accountant for Fitzhard. "He's got Boston pretty much sewed up."

"That's the trouble with trying to book big-name bands; it's impossible to compete with people who are professionals at getting hands," concluded Ken Dumas '83, SCC member. "Next we tried Joan Jett, but she wanted $20,000, and we're just not willing to pay that much. We even tried the Ramones, but they were in South America."

"When asked what arrangement would replace the single big-name band," Thomas replied, "We plan to have three local bands. Human Sexual Response is the only definite successful concert. Win knows all from there to Sunday night. Said Thomas, "But the third band is [an open discussion]."

"Frankly," said Butler, "I wasn't sure a concert that big would be a success at MIT. I was involved in the one last year with Psychedel-Dar... that budget was only $9000 for a semi-successful concert. It's a big jump from there to a $25,000 budget, successful concert. Win knows all the stuff." Cody was unavailable for comment.
