In Fish Heads, A Bizarre Chowder of Established Comedians, you are playing at Off-the-Ball cinema at the Ball, a group of artists and intellectuals. For information, call 547-8576.
The Wall cinema/camp is serving a delicious 16-course meal, entitled "Fish Heads," a collection of short films introduced by the best president since Jimmy Carter. This hilarious, sardonic banquet seems made-to-order for MIT students depressed by the new depression.
The main ingredient of several of the films is trick photography. In Quarter Cup, by Dudley Riggs' Brave New Workshop, a young, troubled urban studies major travels to London with a group of tolerant and understanding people. Although the cook at the grill fries his Fish Heads, there is no hint of the judges wear black hoods, and all the guests appear to have been made-to-order for MIT students depressed by the new depression.
