Policy wrong in El Salvador

(Continued from page 5) relatively less serious injuries. Interestingly, the Spartacists, a group as far left as minus infinity, seem to have significant financial support. Their banners looked as if they had just come off the press of some professional graphics company. The situation there surely becomes even more desperate. The Reagan administration no longer can justify its policies as in support of 'moderate' elements striving to take charge of the government and curb the excesses of extreme right forces. Moreover, the Christian Democrats have refused to concede defeat. Yesterday, Julio Adalid Rey Perea, head of the Christian Democratic Party's slate of candidates, declared, "Without the Christian Democrats, there can be no social justice," and if the five other parties choose to exclude the Christian Democrats from their coalition, he said, "we will logically have to pass into opposition. In that case, God save the country." Unless this administration quickly re-evaluates its current policy it will forfeit the little credibility it now enjoys. If it chooses not to do so, the frequency and strength of demonstrations like last Saturday's should increase markedly as Americans and people in other countries no longer choose to countenance. The American government's ludicrous actions.
