Dining proposals unmet

By Brian Kalinski

"We've accomplished a lot" of the proposals of the Committee on Campus Dining (CCD), said President Ed Stone. The CCD is a group that advocates for changes in dining policies and facilities on campus.

The proposals include: the establishment of a Food Co-op on campus, the creation of the alumni associates program, the suggestion of a new facilities study, and the recommendation of a new dormitory in the Campus Dining Hall.

Stone said that the CCD has made significant progress in implementing these proposals. However, the long-term sustainability of these changes is uncertain due to ongoing budget constraints.

"I'm optimistic that we can accomplish a lot more," Stone added.

Housing policies to change

By Joe Kilian

The MIT Housing Department is considering changes to its housing policies in response to increased demand and budget constraints.

One potential change is to increase the price of housing, which would help offset the cost of maintaining the existing facilities. However, this change could have a negative impact on students who are already facing financial pressures.

"We are looking at all options," said Assistant Dean for Student Affairs Robert Sherwood.

Serious crime on MIT campus declines

By Mark Domb

Serious crimes committed on the MIT campus in 1981 decreased by 25 percent compared to the previous year. This decrease is attributed to a combination of factors, including increased police presence and changes in campus policy.

"We are seeing a positive trend," said Campus Police Chief John O'Connor. "We are working hard to keep the campus safe, and it's paying off."
