World

Invasion of Falklands appears likely — British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher told the House of Commons Tuesday that the tension is building to a level where the British government will respond if the Argentine forces do not withdraw or negotiate. The British government has been seeking a peaceful solution but is not prepared to acquiesce in Argentine demands.

Margaret Thatcher told the House of Commons Tuesday that the time for negotiation was over and that the Argentine forces must leave the Falklands immediately. She also announced that she would call for a national referendum on the issue.

US continues to remain neutral in Falkland crisis — Although the US continues to remain neutral in the Falkland crisis, there are signs that the US is preparing to take a more active role. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. has indicated that the US will support British actions in the area.

Margaret Thatcher told the House of Commons Tuesday that the time for negotiation was over and that the Argentine forces must leave the Falklands immediately. She also announced that she would call for a national referendum on the issue.

US continues to remain neutral in Falkland crisis — Although the US continues to remain neutral in the Falkland crisis, there are signs that the US is preparing to take a more active role. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. has indicated that the US will support British actions in the area.

Margaret Thatcher told the House of Commons Tuesday that the time for negotiation was over and that the Argentine forces must leave the Falklands immediately. She also announced that she would call for a national referendum on the issue.

US continues to remain neutral in Falkland crisis — Although the US continues to remain neutral in the Falkland crisis, there are signs that the US is preparing to take a more active role. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. has indicated that the US will support British actions in the area.

Margaret Thatcher told the House of Commons Tuesday that the time for negotiation was over and that the Argentine forces must leave the Falklands immediately. She also announced that she would call for a national referendum on the issue.

US continues to remain neutral in Falkland crisis — Although the US continues to remain neutral in the Falkland crisis, there are signs that the US is preparing to take a more active role. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. has indicated that the US will support British actions in the area.

Margaret Thatcher told the House of Commons Tuesday that the time for negotiation was over and that the Argentine forces must leave the Falklands immediately. She also announced that she would call for a national referendum on the issue.

US continues to remain neutral in Falkland crisis — Although the US continues to remain neutral in the Falkland crisis, there are signs that the US is preparing to take a more active role. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. has indicated that the US will support British actions in the area.

Margaret Thatcher told the House of Commons Tuesday that the time for negotiation was over and that the Argentine forces must leave the Falklands immediately. She also announced that she would call for a national referendum on the issue.

US continues to remain neutral in Falkland crisis — Although the US continues to remain neutral in the Falkland crisis, there are signs that the US is preparing to take a more active role. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. has indicated that the US will support British actions in the area.

Margaret Thatcher told the House of Commons Tuesday that the time for negotiation was over and that the Argentine forces must leave the Falklands immediately. She also announced that she would call for a national referendum on the issue.

US continues to remain neutral in Falkland crisis — Although the US continues to remain neutral in the Falkland crisis, there are signs that the US is preparing to take a more active role. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. has indicated that the US will support British actions in the area.

Margaret Thatcher told the House of Commons Tuesday that the time for negotiation was over and that the Argentine forces must leave the Falklands immediately. She also announced that she would call for a national referendum on the issue.