Tech Square hit by robberies

By Ken Hughes

Amateurs robbed two MIT graduate students and an MIT employee in three related incidents near Technology Square in the past two weeks, according to Campus Police (CP) Chief James Olivieri.

In the most recent incident, an armed assailant accosted an MIT employee at 12:11am, May 2 and demanded his wallet and checkbook. The employee resisted, and a struggle followed. The robber fled with the staff member's wallet and checkbook, after hitting him in the head. The victim went to the MIT infirmary, then he was taken to a local hospital.

The two other related robberies, both by unarmed attackers, occurred 7:15am, April 24, on Main and Portland Sts. and 11:25pm May 1, on Main St. In both incidents, two assailants confronted an MIT graduate student, demanded and took his wallet, and fled. Both victims gave similar descriptions of the thieves to Campus Police.

Campus Police refused to divulge the names of the victims or describe the weapon of the first attacker.

The CP's have increased patrols in the Technology Square area, and offer their escort service to any MIT community member who so requests, said Olivieri. The Cambridge Police is also working on the MIT-related thefts, as well as other recent thefts near Technology Square.

Campus Police urges members of the MIT community to always travel in groups, to carry as little cash as possible, and to report to Police any person acting suspiciously near Technology Square.

The lady's e-z.

She knows what she likes. Style and elegance are as natural to her as a compliment. Everything she does is special, to be a little dangerous. That makes her exciting, unpredictable. And, after all, she wants more than just any cigarette. She wants her cigarette rette. So she rolls it herself, with e-z wider cigarette papers. And because she can't afford routine, e-z wider are tailored to her many moods. They come in DoubleWide®, Super Wide™, and the new, ultra-thin e-z wider Double Wide®. There's simply no fresher way to smoke. The lady's e-z, her constant companion.
