Democrats need plan for Nov.

has allowed the Republican Party to set the political agenda, and it has been content to react to Republican proposals rather than to offer ideas of its own.

With the elections still two months away, however, it is not too late for the Democrats to begin campaigning positively. They can still offer their own plans to restore economic prosperity. They should admit that government has gone too far in many areas, that Congress cannot create a risk-free society by passing laws, and that inefficient government spending and excessive individual tax rates must be reduced.

Republicans have always called for less government. Democrats should now call not for more or less government but for better government. The government means cuts in unnecessary or inefficient programs—be they for rich or poor people, military or civilian purposes. It also means the preservation and expansion of effective Federal programs. It means tax cuts to encourage economic growth and to reduce the tax reform to make the rich and powerful pay their fair share. It means regulatory reform, not to unshackle business, but to make regulation work more in tune with market incentives and the private sector. And better government means putting the public interest ahead of business, labor, or other special interests.

There is an alternative for Democrats who write about the evils of Reaganomics and for Republicans who decry the excesses of liberalism. Our leaders should trumpet the virtues of sensible, responsible government. Hopefully, the Democrats or the Republicans will eventually realize this and start working to improve our government rather than expand it or tear it down.

To the Editor:

How would you feel about printing a mother to daughter letter (since you printed a daughter to mother one last week)? This is actually composed of half of two letters that came this week.

Amy dear,

You seemed upset on the phone yesterday so I thought I'd send this off to you right away. I suppose it will give him some ideas, too, as if he needed any.

Speaking of your brother, he just went back to Boston tonight.

P.S. Please check out your boyfriends' reading habits before you go out with them.
