MIT moves to cut 41 student groups

By Tony Zamparutti

At tomorrow night's Association of Student Activities (ASA) general meeting, the ASA Executive Committee will present a slate of resolutions that would cut 41 student groups existing at MIT. The resolutions are the result of a months-long process during which the ASA Executive Committee acted on the recommendation of the Finance Board to discontinue disallowed groups.

The Finance Board had already declared that some of the groups were "unconstitutional," but the ASA had refused to cut these groups. The ASA's decision was due to the finance board's lack of authority over student activities, as the student activities are controlled by the ASA. The ASA has 20 members, and the decision requires a majority vote of the members.

The ASA is seeking to save $100,000 by eliminating the remaining disallowed groups. The resolution also proposes a constitutional amendment that would give the ASA more authority over student activities. The amendment would allow the ASA to authorize and discontinue student activities, as well as provide that any new student activities would require a majority vote of the students. The amendment would also provide for the dissolution of any student activity if it violates the constitution.

The decision to cut the student groups was made after a series of discussions with the student leaders of the groups. The discussions included the possibility of the groups appealing the decision, but the groups were unwilling to do so.

The resolution is expected to pass by a large majority. The ASA is confident that the resolution will be approved, as the ASA has the authority to make such decisions. The resolution will be presented to the student body for approval at the next general meeting. The students will have the opportunity to vote on the resolution and the amendment.

The resolution will be presented to the student body for approval at the next general meeting. The students will have the opportunity to vote on the resolution and the amendment. The resolution will be presented to the student body for approval at the next general meeting. The students will have the opportunity to vote on the resolution and the amendment.