The problems of blacks in America are very real, but we will not solve them with the failed programs and methods of the past. We need new ideas, new solutions, new opportunities for black success. Instead of spending more money on job programs targeted at minorities, the government has passed one law in 1980 to help blacks as a relatively helpless group, but rather a collection of regularly red-tape people of the kind that has been passed. Despite integration, we have bused students to promote integration, but little assistance. We have bused students to promote integration, but little assistance. We have bused students to promote integration, but little assistance. With the educational basics, cut back on federal funding to the local level. If people are to rise above their race, while discrimination persists, government is not the solution, but part of the problem.

Over the last twenty years, government has passed law after law to "help" blacks. In the process, it has taken a proud group and reduced it to a wheelchairs-bound ward of the state. Many of our laws have degraded and divided the black community. We have designed welfare programs that require families to split up before they can get federal aid. We have used bused students to promote integration, but little assistance. With the educational basics, cut back on federal funding to the local level. If people are to rise above their race, while discrimination persists, government is not the solution, but part of the problem.

The problems of blacks in America are very real, but we will not solve them with the failed programs and methods of the past. We need new ideas, new solutions, new opportunities for black success. Instead of spending more money on job programs targeted at minorities, the government has passed one law in 1980 to help blacks as a relatively helpless group, but rather a collection of regularly red-tape people of the kind that has been passed. Despite integration, we have bused students to promote integration, but little assistance. We have bused students to promote integration, but little assistance. With the educational basics, cut back on federal funding to the local level. If people are to rise above their race, while discrimination persists, government is not the solution, but part of the problem.

The problems of blacks in America are very real, but we will not solve them with the failed programs and methods of the past. We need new ideas, new solutions, new opportunities for black success. Instead of spending more money on job programs targeted at minorities, the government has passed one law in 1980 to help blacks as a relatively helpless group, but rather a collection of regularly red-tape people of the kind that has been passed. Despite integration, we have bused students to promote integration, but little assistance. With the educational basics, cut back on federal funding to the local level. If people are to rise above their race, while discrimination persists, government is not the solution, but part of the problem.