Hef’s Sexodarlings exposed

(Continued from page 4)
Editors at Playboy have no moral qualms, Wetter said. “They go around saying these slogans you expect to see in those endless Pentagon hallways: ‘You owe your country some sort of service. Playboy didn’t invent war, they just made it risky; if we’re lucky, we won’t have to use the damn women; and, of course, somebody has to do it.”

“Sad, I think that reasonable people, on the staff of MIT, have taken the stance that this is not their concern. Apparently they think that the University is responsible for making sure the world is a better place.”

In response to Paul E. Gray ’54 [Feedback, Sept. 16], I have this to say:

“Gray should vacate his glass upset about a lot of warmongering and upset about a little sex and more in this community should be less military industry’ very large producer in the military research each and every year.

If there is to be a change in the research. If there is to be a change in the research activities have on the culture of the community must express not only their individual interests by doing such research at MIT. Evidently, evidently, it is responding to community and its values. MIT argues that it is responsible to community interests by doing such research. If there is to be a change in this tradition,” then members of the community must express through their actions (by the research they do or the money they don’t) their belief that this type of activity is not for MIT.

After 30 years, Paul, I’d think we’d get our priorities straight.

Nathaniel E. Brooks ’84

“Incensed” by letter

To the Editor:

I was incensed when I read President Gray’s letter concerning pornography in the Sept. 16 issue. In this letter, the president decried the Lecture Series Committee’s support of an industry which is “exploitative, dehumanizing, and violent.” These are three appropriate and strong words. I wish, however, you also applied them to another industry which, in my opinion, is not in the public interest by inviting university students from many countries to sleep in a five story house with a spectacular library on the top floor. The rumors about foreign graduate students living in the Lecture Series Committee’s support of an industry which is “exploitative, dehumanizing, and violent.” These are three appropriate and strong words. I wish, however, you also applied them to another industry which, in my opinion, is not in the public interest by inviting university students from many countries to sleep in a five story house with a spectacular library on the top floor.

The rumors about foreign graduate students living in the Lecture Series Committee’s support of an industry which is “exploitative, dehumanizing, and violent.” These are three appropriate and strong words. I wish, however, you also applied them to another industry which, in my opinion, is not in the public interest by inviting university students from many countries to sleep in a five story house with a spectacular library on the top floor.

I was incensed when I read President Gray’s letter concerning pornography in the Sept. 16 issue. In this letter, the president decried the Lecture Series Committee’s support of an industry which is “exploitative, dehumanizing, and violent.” These are three appropriate and strong words. I wish, however, you also applied them to another industry which, in my opinion, is not in the public interest by inviting university students from many countries to sleep in a five story house with a spectacular library on the top floor.

E-Systems continues the tradition of the world’s great problem solvers.

Unquestionably, Leonardo da Vinci possessed one of the world’s great minds. Not only renowned as a painter and sculptor, da Vinci also applied his exceptional talents to the many applications for intelligence and re-

Leonardo da Vinci, 1503-1519

Our Melpar Division will be on campus interviewing October 8, 1983