Lack of black faculty at MIT seen detrimental to education

By Kevin D. Hart

By Robert E. Machman

By Thomas Hsung

MIT Black Students' Union called for unity among minority student organizations in a luncheon held last Saturday in the Student Center. Students from MIT, Harvard University, and Northeastern University attended the meeting, which was sponsored by MIT's Office of Minority Education.

"We have to initiate a new attitude," said Deborah L. Rennie, S.C., co-chairwoman of the Black Students' Union (MITBSU). "In order to confront the issues that concern us, we have to unite. We have to support each other.

"This is not just a MIT problem," said Rennie. "This applies to other universities as well. The MITBSU is here to provide a forum for discussion and to ensure that minority students are not left behind."

Candidates for mayor of Boston

The seven declared Democratic candidates for president of the United States discussed arms control and defense policy last night at a forum held at Harvard University's Kennedy School of Government.

Most of the debate centered on the issue of freezing development of nuclear arms and the candidates' specific proposals for controlling the arms race.

Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif.; John Glenn, D-Ohio; Gary Hart, D-Colo.; Ernest Hollings, D-S.C.; and former Vice President Walter Mondale all said they support a mutual, verifiable nuclear freeze with the Soviet Union.

Former Sen. George McGovern said he supports an unilateral freeze, "We could well afford" to halt nuclear arms development because the United States already has the capacity to destroy the Soviet Union, several times, he said.

(See Election, Page 1.)

Democratic debate defense at Harvard

By Thomas Hsung

The MIT Black Students' Union called for unity among minority student organizations in a luncheon held last Saturday in the Student Center. Students from MIT, Harvard University, and Northeastern University attended the meeting, which was sponsored by MIT's Office of Minority Education.

"We have to initiate a new attitude," said Deborah L. Rennie, S.C., co-chairwoman of the Black Students' Union (MITBSU). "In order to confront the issues that concern us, we have to unite. We have to support each other.

"This is not just a MIT problem," said Rennie. "This applies to other universities as well. The MITBSU is here to provide a forum for discussion and to ensure that minority students are not left behind."

Candidates for mayor of Boston

The seven declared Democratic candidates for president of the United States discussed arms control and defense policy last night at a forum held at Harvard University's Kennedy School of Government.

Most of the debate centered on the issue of freezing development of nuclear arms and the candidates' specific proposals for controlling the arms race.

Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif.; John Glenn, D-Ohio; Gary Hart, D-Colo.; Ernest Hollings, D-S.C.; and former Vice President Walter Mondale all said they support a mutual, verifiable nuclear freeze with the Soviet Union.

Former Sen. George McGovern said he supports an unilateral freeze, "We could well afford" to halt nuclear arms development because the United States already has the capacity to destroy the Soviet Union, several times, he said.

(See Election, Page 1.)

Democratic debate defense at Harvard

By Thomas Hsung

The MIT Black Students' Union called for unity among minority student organizations in a luncheon held last Saturday in the Student Center. Students from MIT, Harvard University, and Northeastern University attended the meeting, which was sponsored by MIT's Office of Minority Education.

"We have to initiate a new attitude," said Deborah L. Rennie, S.C., co-chairwoman of the Black Students' Union (MITBSU). "In order to confront the issues that concern us, we have to unite. We have to support each other.

"This is not just a MIT problem," said Rennie. "This applies to other universities as well. The MITBSU is here to provide a forum for discussion and to ensure that minority students are not left behind."

Candidates for mayor of Boston

The seven declared Democratic candidates for president of the United States discussed arms control and defense policy last night at a forum held at Harvard University's Kennedy School of Government.

Most of the debate centered on the issue of freezing development of nuclear arms and the candidates' specific proposals for controlling the arms race.

Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif.; John Glenn, D-Ohio; Gary Hart, D-Colo.; Ernest Hollings, D-S.C.; and former Vice President Walter Mondale all said they support a mutual, verifiable nuclear freeze with the Soviet Union.

Former Sen. George McGovern said he supports an unilateral freeze, "We could well afford" to halt nuclear arms development because the United States already has the capacity to destroy the Soviet Union, several times, he said.

(See Election, Page 1.)

Democratic debate defense at Harvard

By Thomas Hsung

The MIT Black Students' Union called for unity among minority student organizations in a luncheon held last Saturday in the Student Center. Students from MIT, Harvard University, and Northeastern University attended the meeting, which was sponsored by MIT's Office of Minority Education.

"We have to initiate a new attitude," said Deborah L. Rennie, S.C., co-chairwoman of the Black Students' Union (MITBSU). "In order to confront the issues that concern us, we have to unite. We have to support each other.

"This is not just a MIT problem," said Rennie. "This applies to other universities as well. The MITBSU is here to provide a forum for discussion and to ensure that minority students are not left behind."

Candidates for mayor of Boston

The seven declared Democratic candidates for president of the United States discussed arms control and defense policy last night at a forum held at Harvard University's Kennedy School of Government.

Most of the debate centered on the issue of freezing development of nuclear arms and the candidates' specific proposals for controlling the arms race.

Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif.; John Glenn, D-Ohio; Gary Hart, D-Colo.; Ernest Hollings, D-S.C.; and former Vice President Walter Mondale all said they support a mutual, verifiable nuclear freeze with the Soviet Union.

Former Sen. George McGovern said he supports an unilateral freeze, "We could well afford" to halt nuclear arms development because the United States already has the capacity to destroy the Soviet Union, several times, he said.

(See Election, Page 1.)

Democratic debate defense at Harvard

By Thomas Hsung

The MIT Black Students' Union called for unity among minority student organizations in a luncheon held last Saturday in the Student Center. Students from MIT, Harvard University, and Northeastern University attended the meeting, which was sponsored by MIT's Office of Minority Education.

"We have to initiate a new attitude," said Deborah L. Rennie, S.C., co-chairwoman of the Black Students' Union (MITBSU). "In order to confront the issues that concern us, we have to unite. We have to support each other.

"This is not just a MIT problem," said Rennie. "This applies to other universities as well. The MITBSU is here to provide a forum for discussion and to ensure that minority students are not left behind."

Candidates for mayor of Boston

The seven declared Democratic candidates for president of the United States discussed arms control and defense policy last night at a forum held at Harvard University's Kennedy School of Government.

Most of the debate centered on the issue of freezing development of nuclear arms and the candidates' specific proposals for controlling the arms race.

Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif.; John Glenn, D-Ohio; Gary Hart, D-Colo.; Ernest Hollings, D-S.C.; and former Vice President Walter Mondale all said they support a mutual, verifiable nuclear freeze with the Soviet Union.

Former Sen. George McGovern said he supports an unilateral freeze, "We could well afford" to halt nuclear arms development because the United States already has the capacity to destroy the Soviet Union, several times, he said.

(See Election, Page 1.)

Democratic debate defense at Harvard

By Thomas Hsung

The MIT Black Students' Union called for unity among minority student organizations in a luncheon held last Saturday in the Student Center. Students from MIT, Harvard University, and Northeastern University attended the meeting, which was sponsored by MIT's Office of Minority Education.

"We have to initiate a new attitude," said Deborah L. Rennie, S.C., co-chairwoman of the Black Students' Union (MITBSU). "In order to confront the issues that concern us, we have to unite. We have to support each other.

"This is not just a MIT problem," said Rennie. "This applies to other universities as well. The MITBSU is here to provide a forum for discussion and to ensure that minority students are not left behind."

Candidates for mayor of Boston

The seven declared Democratic candidates for president of the United States discussed arms control and defense policy last night at a forum held at Harvard University's Kennedy School of Government.

Most of the debate centered on the issue of freezing development of nuclear arms and the candidates' specific proposals for controlling the arms race.

Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif.; John Glenn, D-Ohio; Gary Hart, D-Colo.; Ernest Hollings, D-S.C.; and former Vice President Walter Mondale all said they support a mutual, verifiable nuclear freeze with the Soviet Union.

Former Sen. George McGovern said he supports an unilateral freeze, "We could well afford" to halt nuclear arms development because the United States already has the capacity to destroy the Soviet Union, several times, he said.

(See Election, Page 1.)