Northeastern, he said, the program is often discouraging "due to the lack of pre-college exposure of minority youths to the various fields of science and engineering," he states in a paper entitled "Technical Literacy and its Importance for People of Color.

"Until we minorities develop a more pervasive awareness of technology and its value, we continue to fail to graduate the number of engineers and scientists proportionate to our representation in society," Blackman said.

Shirley M. McBay, dean for Undergraduate Education at Northeastern, yesterday said, "We're going to stick to our guns and be sure to work hard to try to continue and the government."

"We don't want to see any benefits taken away from students. The Institute employees, because activity employees neither receive tuition benefits nor vacation time. The employees would see no benefits from the new program, and the student groups would have to pay from their own revenue, she said. The Institute recruits and its long-term goal is to sell student employees to compensate for the fee, she added.

"I'm also concerned that this program will cut into Institute employees," she said. "I'm also concerned that this program will cut into Institute employees."

"The pubs have to work hard in break even," Witt continued. "They can't cut back on their employees. A lot would be lost on the students' side, we see we're getting no benefits. Student groups do have a lot less money.
