Hollings discusses issues

what it is," he said.

Hollings said the United States needs to define an industrial policy, but he is against creating a new government agency for this purpose. "No political body can decide who the winners and losers will be," he said, preferring to let economic forces determine the fate of various industries.

"We must confront the realities of foreign trade," he said, noting that while the United States supports free trade, other countries are embroiled in a trade war. "The myth is that we have free trade," he added, "but what we have is government to govern competition" using import quotas and tariffs, licensing requirements, and other similar regulations.

Hollings said that we have a right to anticipate reciprocal demands which burden the economy, but he is against creating a new government agency for this purpose and defining an industrial policy. He said that we should remove US troops from Lebanon until we can set legitimate national goals and identify reasons for their deployment.

He also said he favors scrapping either the MX missile or B-1 bomber programs, and applying the $30 to $40 billion to education programs. "If we are willing to spend all this money, the children of the United States are worth at least one weapons system," he said.
