Police tag bicycles

By Gary J. Drlik

The number of reported bicycle parking violations is large, as expected for this time of year, according to James Olivieri, chief of MIT Campus Police.

More people are bicycle riders who cannot find a space at the nearest rack.

A shortage of bicycle racks behind Bush Building (Building 13) and contributed to the number of violations during those times than during other months, he said.

The effort to crack down on bicycle parking violators is more intense than in the past, he said. The effort, however, lacks "consistent, daily enforcement" due to limited time and manpower and to the seasonal nature of the problem.

Perhaps the most obvious violations are those on the parapole ramps near the Tech Coop.

By Gary J. Drlik

A shortage of bicycle racks behind Bush Building (Building 13) and contributed to the number of violations during those times than during other months, he said.

The effort to crack down on bicycle parking violators is more intense than in the past, he said. The effort, however, lacks "consistent, daily enforcement" due to limited time and manpower and to the seasonal nature of the problem.

Perhaps the most obvious violations are those on the parapole ramps near the Tech Coop.

By Gary J. Drlik

A shortage of bicycle racks behind Bush Building (Building 13) and contributed to the number of violations during those times than during other months, he said.

The effort to crack down on bicycle parking violators is more intense than in the past, he said. The effort, however, lacks "consistent, daily enforcement" due to limited time and manpower and to the seasonal nature of the problem.

Perhaps the most obvious violations are those on the parapole ramps near the Tech Coop.

By Gary J. Drlik

A shortage of bicycle racks behind Bush Building (Building 13) and contributed to the number of violations during those times than during other months, he said.

The effort to crack down on bicycle parking violators is more intense than in the past, he said. The effort, however, lacks "consistent, daily enforcement" due to limited time and manpower and to the seasonal nature of the problem.

Perhaps the most obvious violations are those on the parapole ramps near the Tech Coop.