Faculty votes changes

Freshmen scoring a 4 or 5 on the College Board chemistry advance placement test would not receive credit for 5.11, Wrighton said. They would earn instead credit for Special Problems in Chemistry for Undergraduates (5.89).

Students could earn credit for 5.11 by passing an Institute advanced standing examination given during residence/orientation week, Wrighton said. The subject 5.11 will include three lectures, one recitation, and a "topic" section each week, according to Wrighton. Daniel S. Kemp, professor of chemistry, will lecture the class, Wrighton said. The faculty passed the amendment without dissent, with 45 in favor and five abstaining.

The faculty, in other business, discussed a measure proposed by Professor Arthur C. Smith, chairman of the faculty, to reduce end of term pressure. The proposal would restrict tests and assignments during the last week of classes for subjects with final examinations, and would allow either a test or an assignment during that week for subjects without final examinations. The proposal also would end all classes the Thursday of the week before finals, and would allow a three- or four-day reading period before final examinations. Travis R. Merritt, associate professor of humanities and social science, questioned the usefulness of the reading period, since few institutes schedule final examinations. The faculty will vote on Smith's proposal at its February meeting.
