Be socially responsible

...tion. The traditional view of progress in technology is only one aspect of this, albeit an important one. There can be no real change in the present overall direction of social patterns without a new responsibility and vision on the part of those who shape this direction. Each individual must recognize her or his responsibility for making society (and technology) what it is and what it will be. Nothing is more urgent today than the examination and questioning of our current directions and priorities. Science and technology can be the tools for both beneficial and destructive endeavors, and it is not always easy to see beforehand which way a particular project will lead. But we must recognize that, in the work we do today, we determine the world of tomorrow, and that the choice and the responsibility for the world of tomorrow lies with each of us today.
