Registration day figures released

Registration day for the Spring Term was held Feb. 6.

The registration process went very smoothly this year, according to Margaret S. Richardson, executive officer of the Undergraduate Academic Support Office. "We have had many fewer problems than usual," she said.

Man arraigned for robbery

(Continued from page 1)

The woman was "shaken up" after the attempted robbery and was taken to MIT's Medical Department, where she was treated for minor injuries.

The Campus Police later discovered the 31-year-old man, who is currently on parole from the Massachusetts Correctional Institution at Bridgewater. He had served a term for robbery.

The man was arraigned Wednesday and is now being held on $1000 in bail.

"It was a case of perfect timing," Glavin said. "We have patrols there for preventive measures, and this was an ideal situation."

Two robberies occurred last November near the corner of Harvard and Portland Streets, one block from the Alaby Street parking lot, Glavin said, "but there's no pattern to them."

The UASO was quite satisfied with the job done by student associate advisors who volunteered to help with schedule changes in Cutler Gymnasium, she added.

The Registrar's Office has "heard very few complaints about the registration process not working correctly," Smith said.

The UAOS was quieter satisfied with the job done by student associate advisors who volunteered to help with schedule changes in Cutler Gymnasium, she added.

The Registrar's Office has "heard very few complaints about the registration process not working correctly," Smith said.

The UAOS was quieter satisfied with the job done by student associate advisors who volunteered to help with schedule changes in Cutler Gymnasium, she added.

The Registrar's Office has "heard very few complaints about the registration process not working correctly," Smith said.