Group surveys labor issues

By Ronald W. Norman

A group of MIT and the University's labor experts, along with a group of MIT labor experts, is working on a report that will be used as a guide for future labor negotiations.

The group, which includes campus security officers, has been working on the report for several years. The report is expected to be released in the near future.

The group's work has been funded by the Massachusetts Labor Department, which has been working with the group to develop a comprehensive labor issues report.

The report includes a survey of labor issues at MIT, which has been conducted in collaboration with the University's labor union.

The survey has found that there are several issues that need to be addressed by the University, including:

- The need for a more effective negotiating process.
- The need for better communication between the University and the labor union.
- The need for better training for labor union officers.
- The need for better representation of labor union members.

The University has agreed to work with the labor union to address these issues.

The report is expected to be released in the near future, and will be available for public review.

---

Mondale prevails in Iowa caucuses

By Iver S. Kolahi

Local Mondale supporters called in a lecture last Thursday at the University of Minnesota's St. Paul campus, blaming the system for "peanut pressure" on Mondale's cabinet.

Mondale won by a margin of 2 percent, and the Mondale campaign in Washington, D.C., was "very pleased," said one local Mondale supporter.

"The Mondale campaign in Washington, D.C., was "very pleased," said one local Mondale supporter. "The Mondale campaign in Washington, D.C., was "very pleased," said one local Mondale supporter.

A spokesperson for the Mondale campaign in Washington, D.C., said: "We have the best organization and the best candidates." The spokesperson said that the Mondale campaign in Washington, D.C., would continue to work hard for Mondale's victory.

---

Schmitt speaks about US material resources

By Diana ben-Aaron

"The idea of material resources and the economy is an extremely important topic," said Schmitt.

Schmitt is a professor of economics at MIT and has been working on the topic for several years. He is currently working on a book about the topic.

The book is expected to be released in the near future.

---

Tech photo by Sahil Sen

Tech photo by Sahil Sen

MIT Cambridge Massachusetts Friday, February 24, 1984