Revenge of the Gumbys

Undergraduate Association elections are coming once again. As they do every year, students must vote for the candidates whom they believe are going to do the best job of representing their interests.

They return every spring with the same old slogan: "If you care about student affairs, vote for us!" But when you really think about it, who cares about student affairs? It's just a bunch of kids who don't care about anything except their own little worlds. But don't let that fool you into thinking that the Undergraduate Association is some sort of minor annoyance. They have the power to make or break the college experience for thousands of students.

The Undergraduate Association is the only group of students who has any real power on campus. They control the money, and they control the policies. If they don't like something, they can make it go away. If they like something, they can make it happen.

But the Undergraduate Association is not just about controlling things. It's also about representing students. It's important that the Undergraduate Association does a good job representing students. If they don't, then students are left with no one to turn to for help.

So, when you vote for the Undergraduate Association, remember that you are choosing the people who are going to represent you. Make sure that you vote for people who are going to do a good job.

After all, you only get one vote, so make it count!
