All nations face destruction

To realize the enormity of the problems we have to look at them at the global scale. "Patrio-ticism" or "nationalism" views are obsolete, short-sighted, and plain dangerous. It is now impossible to indefinitely isolate any country from the rest of the world.

Even if a country could isolate itself economically and politically, it would still be totally vulnerable to the world ecological situation. The wind, water, and living organisms would still bring deadly diseases across its borders; contaminated water, air and toxic wastes, contaminated rivers, acid rain, deadly diseases across its borders; or absence of plants; and polluted rivers, acid rain, and polluted water would still bring death to all.

It is now impossible to indefinitely isolate any country from the rest of the world.

Isolation or indifference to the world situation is not the solution. The opposite is true. ESG is the only way to find a new director. We were quite disappointed that the position could not be filled by the first candidate found. Professor Steve L. Chaoever, however, the search committee and additional candidates should be proposed soon.

Because of the change in directions, the ESG community has been focusing its attention on the past history and future direction of the program. Under its new director, we feel ESG should be able to make an increasing contribution, not just to the students in the program, but to the Institute as a whole.
