Friedlaender to succeed Hanham

By Robert E. Malchien
Professor Ann F. Friedlaender Ph'54, head of the Department of Economics, will become dean of the School of Humanities and Social Sciences on Sept. 1. Friedlaender will succeed Dean Harold J. Hanham, who is resigning after 11 years in office to pursue teaching and writing.

"I think the general thrust and mandate is to increase the strength of the School of Humanities and Social Sciences," Friedlaender said.

The school should be "more visible" to attract students and to make majoring in the humanities "a more viable option," Friedlaender continued.

"I'm not sure how to go about it specifically because I haven't taken the job yet," she said.

"We have to think more creatively about undergraduate curriculum," the new dean declared.

Housing system need not expand

(Continued from page 1)

Sherwood emphasized that "crowding is really a full term phenomenon." Students leaving the dormitory system for off-campus housing throughout the year, especially just after first semester, is an existing problem, he added.

The administration announced that the anti-rushing policy would be dropped for this year. Examinations scheduled for R/O week will not be made official this year. Lists will not be made available to anyone, except transfer students will be subject to the writing requirement and are encouraged to take the exam.

"The members of the Writing Program wanted to test it as early as possible so that the results would be available for the [student's] meetings with their advisors," Friedlaender said.

The swim test will be held Friday, the end of R/O week, except for the medical cases. The test will be conducted, according to Sherwood, at the Intramural Pool.

Freshman trip cancelled

The Dean's Office denied permission to the Boston College Outing Club to take freshmen on a trip to Vermont before the last week of classes.

"The idea was great," Sherwood said, "but the Outing Club was not able to work out problems with liability insurance. It is currently unknown what will occur next year," he said.