opinion

UA holds first meeting, discusses VI crowding

(Continued from page 4) will be up to want to match in Course VI after two years here. MIT's unique freedom of major, together with Freshman year fail, is the reason MIT is able to attract such a large fraction of the small pool of admitted students who, while interested in science, have a bent toward the humanities. Because their interests and states may appear less likely to go Course VI, they will probably be allowed to go Course VI by the restriction; because their alternative will be Ivy League schools where they don't have to commit to a major. MIT's unique freedom of major, together with Freshman year fail, is the reason MIT is able to attract such a large fraction of the small pool of admitted students who, while interested in science, have a bent toward the humanities. Because these students have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities, have a bent toward the humanities. Because these students...