The Legend of Fred

By Jim Bredt

I don't know when or where, but I suppose I will die tomorrow.

How can I make this day worth it?

People ask me what will happen next in this strip. I don't know until it happens. That's the magic of the legend.

It was with these thoughts that Mike entered the class.

But tell me, how did you wake up just now?

But I've been wasting time thinking about my future as a master race prototype. It doesn't mean anything. I'll die tomorrow.

What can I do right now?

Meanwhile, Joe the rat is talking to his boss, Prof. Gardner, about a meeting with some interested industrialists.

This is the break we've been waiting for! But be careful! These guys are real heavy.

Nothing about the distillation through a rattlesnake skin, huh?

Hey, I know! You're good at designing things. Aren't you?

I have some friends who are doing a service to humanity and they need some high-tech know-how.

Sound's hard but I need to stop soon!

Gentlemen, please come in!

Here's your $100 grand for the patient, Professor. But we want a little insurance that this thing really works.

We wanna take Mickey here along with us in case we run into problems.

Why not? A little industrial experience will be valuable for him.
