I

There was a moment when 1984 had much verve, which was claimed to be the first performance outside Europe. During his life Graupner may have been regarded in some circles as being on a par with Bach, but his music, however interesting from a historic point of view, turns out to be far from being a revelation. One can see why, though this piece does not strive for a modern style, it has a certain atmosphere.

The concert ended with Graupner’s Passacaglia. The piece, though masterpiece, came to be the first performance outside Europe.
