Guest Column/Randy Hertzman

Consider effects your actions have

One day Farmer Jones has the opportunity to make a choice. He could either continue to graze cows or he could sell his cows. He has not made a decision yet. He has been thinking about the options. Jones wakes up early and decides to make a decision. He studies the options carefully and then makes his choice.

The choice that Farmer Jones makes has a significant impact on his life and the lives of many others. The decision to continue grazing cows will benefit the environment and the local community. The decision to sell the cows will benefit the local economy and provide jobs for many people.

In the end, Farmer Jones decides to continue grazing cows. He believes that the impact of his decision will be positive for the community and the environment. He is content with his decision and moves forward with his life.