Grossman said. "They're the agency.

"Around the country, a lot of rethinking of curricula is going on. In many traditional liberal arts schools, there's a big drive of awareness of science and technology and their role in life to be reduced in the curricula," he continued.

"Mars said the committee may eventually make a proposal for some modifications of entry requirements. This modification would enable students with a strong liberal arts inclination to design a curriculum which will include liberal arts education at MIT for 100-150 student each year," Mars said.

"I've seen this in a number of...."
