UA recommends MIT sell S. African stocks

But he claimed that divestment would not necessarily decrease the size of MIT's endowment. "Some institutions have altered their portfolios and come out ahead. There's no guarantee, but it also could happen to MIT." The council discussed whether it should vote on the proposal before the student resistance to divestment. "I'm quite pleased with his attendance [at Apartheid Colloquium] events and his willingness to engage in public discussion," she said.

Moser said he was unsure how the UA Council's decision will affect the upcoming faculty vote, but "he hopes that the faculty will follow the University's lead." Salka said he hoped the UA Council's decision to support divestment would contribute to the pro-divestment side in the faculty vote. He also suggested that divestment could be the first in a series of MIT actions against US corporations operating in South Africa. He added that he would have liked to see MIT take more of a leading role in the fight against apartheid by divesting earlier.
