MIT has social responsibility

(Continued from page 5) because MIT uses many resources of the surrounding community and should reciprocate. There are currently some administrative and educational activities for public service, but there is no real sustained institutional commitment. The profit and participants in these activities should be increased.

MIT now has a unique opportunity as part of its look "in-development of the surrounding community. It can do this by increasing the opportunities for UROPs in areas of community development, by providing opportunities for internships through such programs as the College Venture Program at Brown University, by promoting extra-curricular activities such as the tutoring of school children in the sciences, and by adding or creating courses where MIT students can apply technical skills learned toward the solution of social problems.

Such activities will provide beneficial learning experiences for members of the MIT community and can help improve conditions in the surrounding community. In addition, MIT will graduate students who know when and how to apply their skills appropriately to the problems of society. As future leaders or as advisors to policy makers we have a responsibility to see that our knowledge is applied constructively toward the alleviation of social problems. To foster this responsibility MIT should increase its institutional commitment to public service and facilitate the MIT community's participation in such activities.

Dear Dr. Advice,

I'm a classical music buff. But, hey, I'm a pretty cool guy too. I can kick up a storm on a dance floor that a girl would think she's out on the Mojave -- not taking a twist at the local pub.

Well, last week I had a big party. At the last minute, I went to get some tunes for the party tape. Problem was -- I got, once again, hooked on the classical. I may bring enough cash for Beethoven, Tchaikovsky and Stravinsky. I only brought enough cash for Beethoven, Tchaikovsky and Stravinsky. I got, once again, hooked on the classical.

Well, despite serving enough food and drink to feed a summer camp of twenty. Lighten up, Ludwig. Not everyone can move from the sublime to the ridiculous.

Because we believe that college is the first sign of success, we've made it easier for you to get the American Express Card. Graduating students can get the Card as soon as they accept a $10,000 career-oriented job. If you're not graduating yet, you can apply for a special sponsored Card. Look for student applications on campus. Or call 1-800-THE-CASD, and tell them you want a student application.
