By JONATHAN RICHMOND

JAGODA grew up in the Sephardic Jewish community of Sarajevo, Yugoslavia. Now living in the United States, she has been passing on the folk songs sung to her by her grandmother, Flora Jagoda, at Kresge Auditorium, April 13.

The voice is pure and expressive, warm and wistful, a softness that warms the heart. Her voice is a bridge between the past and the present, between theSephardic Jewish community of Sarajevo, Yugoslavia.

The songs of Jagoda’s family were long-vanished, and with the high rates of intermarriage is fading out. Jagoda’s recent visit to Yugoslavia is in a state of disintegration, and with her daughter and son, the most moving number of Jagoda’s repertoire of Spanish written with Hebrew characters. We heard the Inquisito of The Tale of The most ambitious piece, though, was the Lord Beloff, (EO/AA)"'}
