Class of '89 oversubscribes to EECS; MIT may restrict majors next year

Conscious selection," Behnke said.

The faculty called for the restriction to apply to 25 percent of admitted students. Behnke felt that it might be possible to apply the restriction to fewer students.

The Admissions Office is comparing students' choice of major with the statement of intended major on their applications in order to attempt to judge EECS enrollments for the incoming freshman class on a continuing basis.

Next year's class, which will be smaller than the present freshman class, has about 100 fewer students interested in EECS. Behnke said. This is true in part to an increase in the number of women in the class, who Behnke said are less likely to enroll in EECS.

Behnke was hopeful that improved public relations would provide a broadened applicant pool. The Admissions Office is currently preparing several new publications and a video slide show to promote various aspects of the school, he noted.

"There is no question (restrictive admission) would have an adverse effect on admissions," Behnke said. He declined to estimate the impact, however.

CJAFA should "look at what we are trying to achieve and not get carried away with the numbers," said Professor Arthur C. Smith, former chairman of the faculty. Smith was "laid off" of the CEP when it proposed the admission restrictions.

"If (EECS enrollment) decreases from last year any temptation to back off would not be so hard," Smith said. "If we're starting back up again, that's another story. It's a problem of exercising judgment."

"Nobody wants to take this action," Smith emphasized. He suggested that the faculty might want to reconsider its vote.

"If it's unlikely that the numbers would be that large that we would definitely restrict admission," Smith said.

CJAFA protests at Corporation meeting some other universities the faculty would have been demonstrating alongside the students.

"The faculty has a lot of different things to do," Smith said. "They might be working in the classroom labs or teaching," he explained. "MIT is a very different place.""The faculty has never asked for such a voice, but when the faculty really wants something, they usually get it," Smith said. He agreed to the protester's suggestion of using MIT as a foreign monastery.

Several coalition members asked the Campus Police officers and the Security Coordinator if the meeting was actually meeting in 10:30. "I don't know," Smith said. The Executive Committee does not usually announce its meeting location.

Rosen refused to name the source of his information about the location of the meeting.

Coalition speaks with Saxon

After the demonstration had moved to Gray's office, Contreras asked to meet with Gray's secretary. When she came out of the office, Contreras demanded that Gray send all members of the Corporation copies of a letter from Gray to the coalition explaining the administration's position on the firing of the Shunt's destruction.

Once the secretary re-entered the office, the protesters sat down along the wall of the corridor outside.

David S. Saxon '41, chairman of the Corporation, passed by the demonstration. Rich Cowan G asked him whether the Corporation plans to increase its student representation. "CJAC (The Corporation Joint Advisory Committee) is planning to arrange something," he replied.

Rosen then asked Saxon if he believed US corporations in South Africa were a positive influence. Saxon answered yes. As Rosen attempted to ask another question, Saxon left amid cries of "fascist" and "racist" from other protesters.

Faculty Fellows program part of advising changes

Two faculty members are strongly associated with each living group, and in the fall of 1987 the system will endure over several years," he continued.

Dean for Student Affairs Shirley McNalley initiated the project. Merrill said. The Provost's Office and the Office of the Dean for Undergraduate Education have also provided strong support for the project.

The process of matching living groups with faculty has begun, Merrill continued.

Merrill said the ODSA has also sent questionnaires about the program to living groups in order to get student input. "The more response we can get from the living groups, the better this will go," he added.

The program has already been given a "positive review by the students," according to Merrill. Although the faculty participates they will not be paid, the funding will be available for faculty-sponsored events. "If a faculty fellow wants to take students out to get ice cream or go to a concert, there will be some money," Merrill said.

"This is an experiment," Merrill continued, "and we have to measure the success and keep track of what's happening." Merrill would like students to prepare the initiative for matching dorms with faculty. A "lightness of touch" is required on the part of the ODSA, Merrill said, to avoid the feeling that the "dorms are being colonized by the faculty."

Merrill, who is also director of the Humanities Undergraduate Office, emphasized that the Faculty Fellows program is not meant to be a "humanities-minded" effort. "I wanted to get (involved) from the Schools of Science and Engineering," he said.
