Installation of Surrogates by Alan McCollum, now at the ICA. Temporary Art was able to generate both interest and controversy. Now, as the final in a series of retrospectives commemorating its 50th birthday, the ICA presents a sort of update of that show. The present exhibition is woefully small compared to the range of issues it covers, and not entirely unambiguous for that. Its emphasis is shifted with respect to the 1966 precursor: rather than the found object as the tradition of Duchamp, it addresses appropriation in art in general. Indeed, virtually the only exhibit which displays the original execution of the everyday object is the collage Apollinaire Enamelled by Duchamp himself. On a less elementary plane there are edited versions of Bufiuel and the original Body Snatchers. But in Barbara Kruger's photographs, dramatically maimed and endowed with a metaphorical sex, or Jenny Höber's speeches on a message unit machine, the role of the Found Object seems marginal at best.

Tickets will be sold by the Technology Community Association, W20-475 in the Student Center. As opening hours are currently a bit will be held until three days before each performance.
