FORUM ON THE FUTURE OF THE CREATIVE ARTS AT M.I.T.
Thursday, February 26, 4 to 6 pm, 34-101

As you may know, MIT is currently undertaking a major reappraisal of its undergraduate program, with the aim of improving the balance and integration of science, technology, the humanities, and the arts. In the context of this reappraisal, Provost John Deutch has convened a committee to evaluate what opportunities we are providing—and what opportunities we could be providing—for doing, studying, and operating the arts at MIT.

A few of the topics that the committee has begun to consider:

- the relationship between academic programs in the arts and related curricular activities;
- the need for significant increases in rehearsal and performance space for the performing;
- a possible merger of the current Music Section with the academic programs in Drama and in Dance;
- the recent decline in faculty and resources devoted to the traditional visual and related arts, despite a sustained, high, and unmet student demand for classes in these areas.

The forum on Thursday, which is being sponsored by the UA and the GSC, will give you a means to voice your opinions directly to members of the committee.
